Lessons from Centurions
